Use this after your 4-pass draft (Frame → Draft → Interrogate → Own it). Paste your AI-drafted sections in, then edit until every line is something you'd defend in a review.

1 Problem Statement

What's broken today, for whom, and how do you know? One or two sentences, no solution talk yet.

2 Goals

What this feature must achieve. 2–4 bullets, each one measurable or falsifiable.

3 Non-Goals

The deliberate bets — what you're explicitly NOT doing this release, and why.

4 User Stories

As a <user>, I want <capability>, so that <outcome>. Cover the primary path plus the edge cases that would embarrass you in production.

5 Key Flows

The step-by-step path through the feature — entry point, main flow, what happens when something goes wrong.

6 Success Metrics

Real numbers with a source, not placeholders the model invented. No number = guessing.

7 Open Questions

What you (or the model) flagged as unresolved. Assign an owner before this ships.

BEFORE YOU CALL IT DONE

Ask the model: "What did you assume that I didn't tell you?" Read every assumption it flags — the spec-changing ones (scope, who's affected, what counts as done) are yours to decide, not the model's. Then run the green/amber/red check on anything from a real customer or your real roadmap before it goes in this document.
